

Driving on the Beach

How do you feel about people driving on the beach?

While many people drive on the beaches in Western Australia, most would be unaware of the impact this has. The images below were taken at a sand dune hundreds of metres back from the ocean in an area used regularly by people in off-road vehicles. They wouldn't realise they were driving over a site of significance to Aboriginal people, known as a midden, with large quantities of shells and sharp rocks used to scoop out the edible contents. Beach driving can also damage Fairy Tern nests and habitats for other animals. How do you feel about this? What would the impact be? What could you do to help?

How do you feel about vehicles driving on our beaches?

What would the impact be?

What could you do to help?